Chapter 1 – The Magic Key

Trudy reached out and offered the key back to Jay.
"Me, too," said Jay, starting to take the key.

Chapter 1 – The Magic Key

There was no flash or sound to show that something astounding was happening. They were just suddenly in a different room.

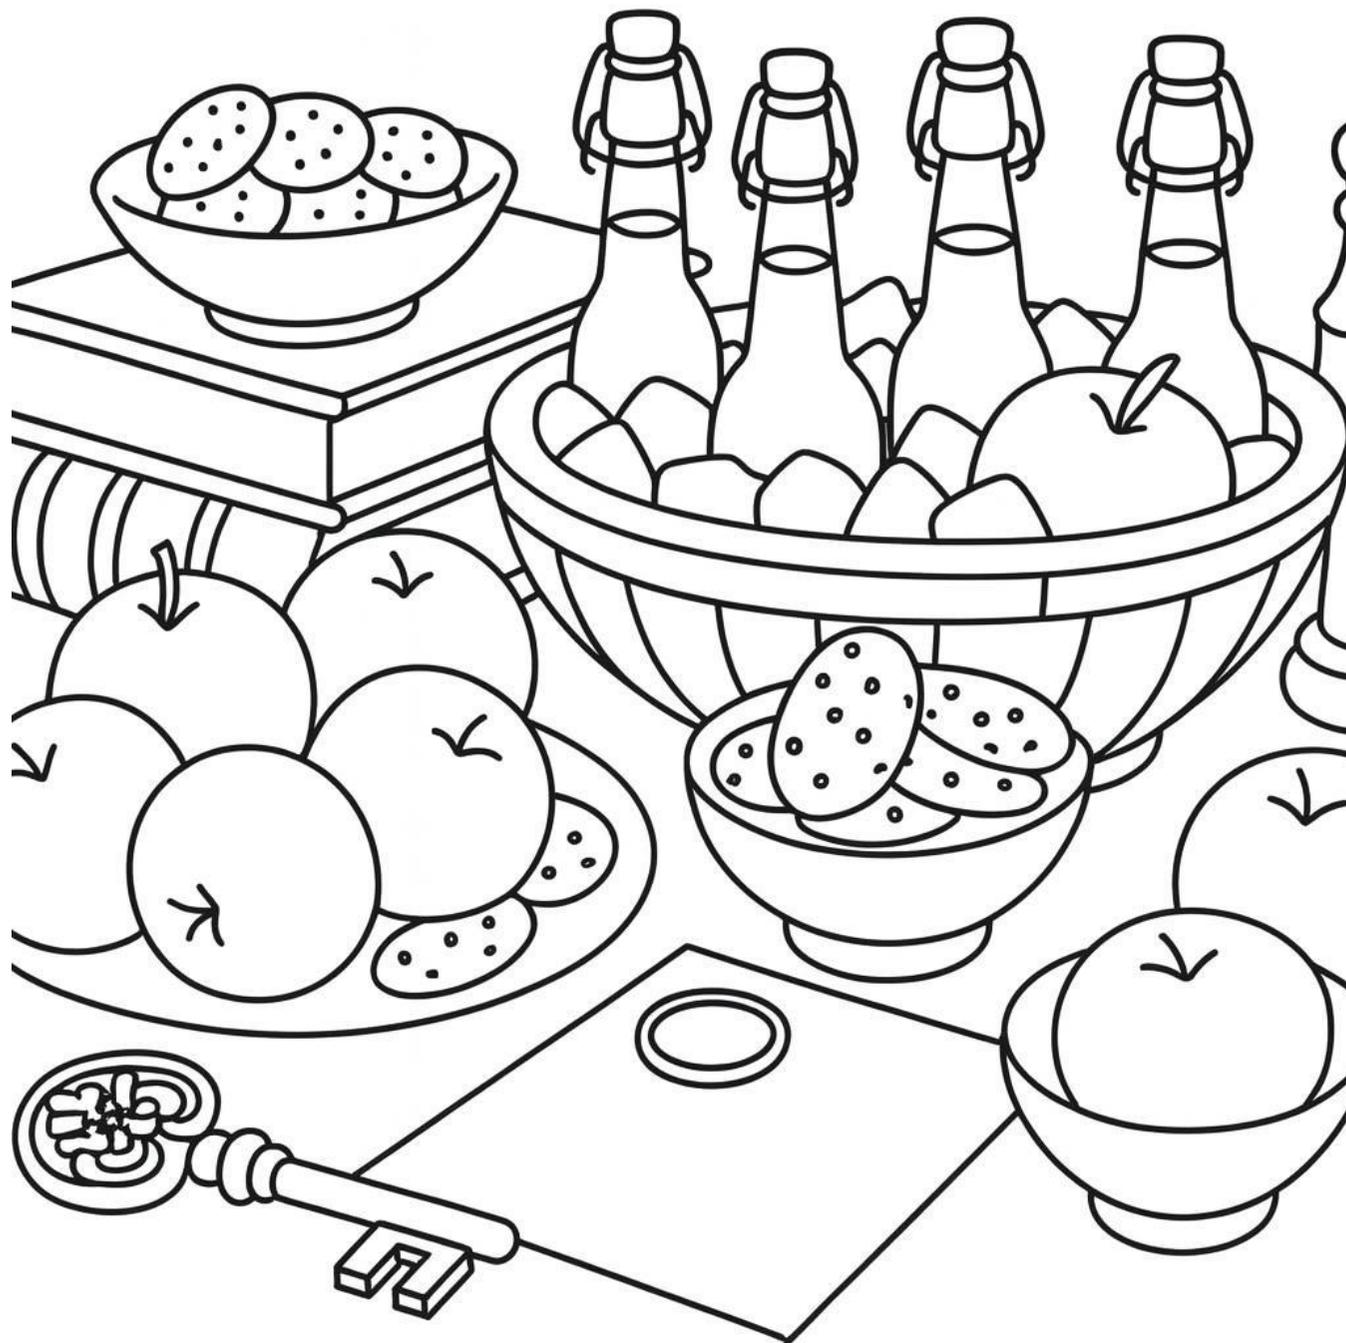

There was something very calming about the strange old man. The old man's voice was soothing.

Chapter 1 – The Magic Key

The shelves were full of old books, scrolls, stacks of yellowed paper, and strange knick-knacks.

A Magic Snack

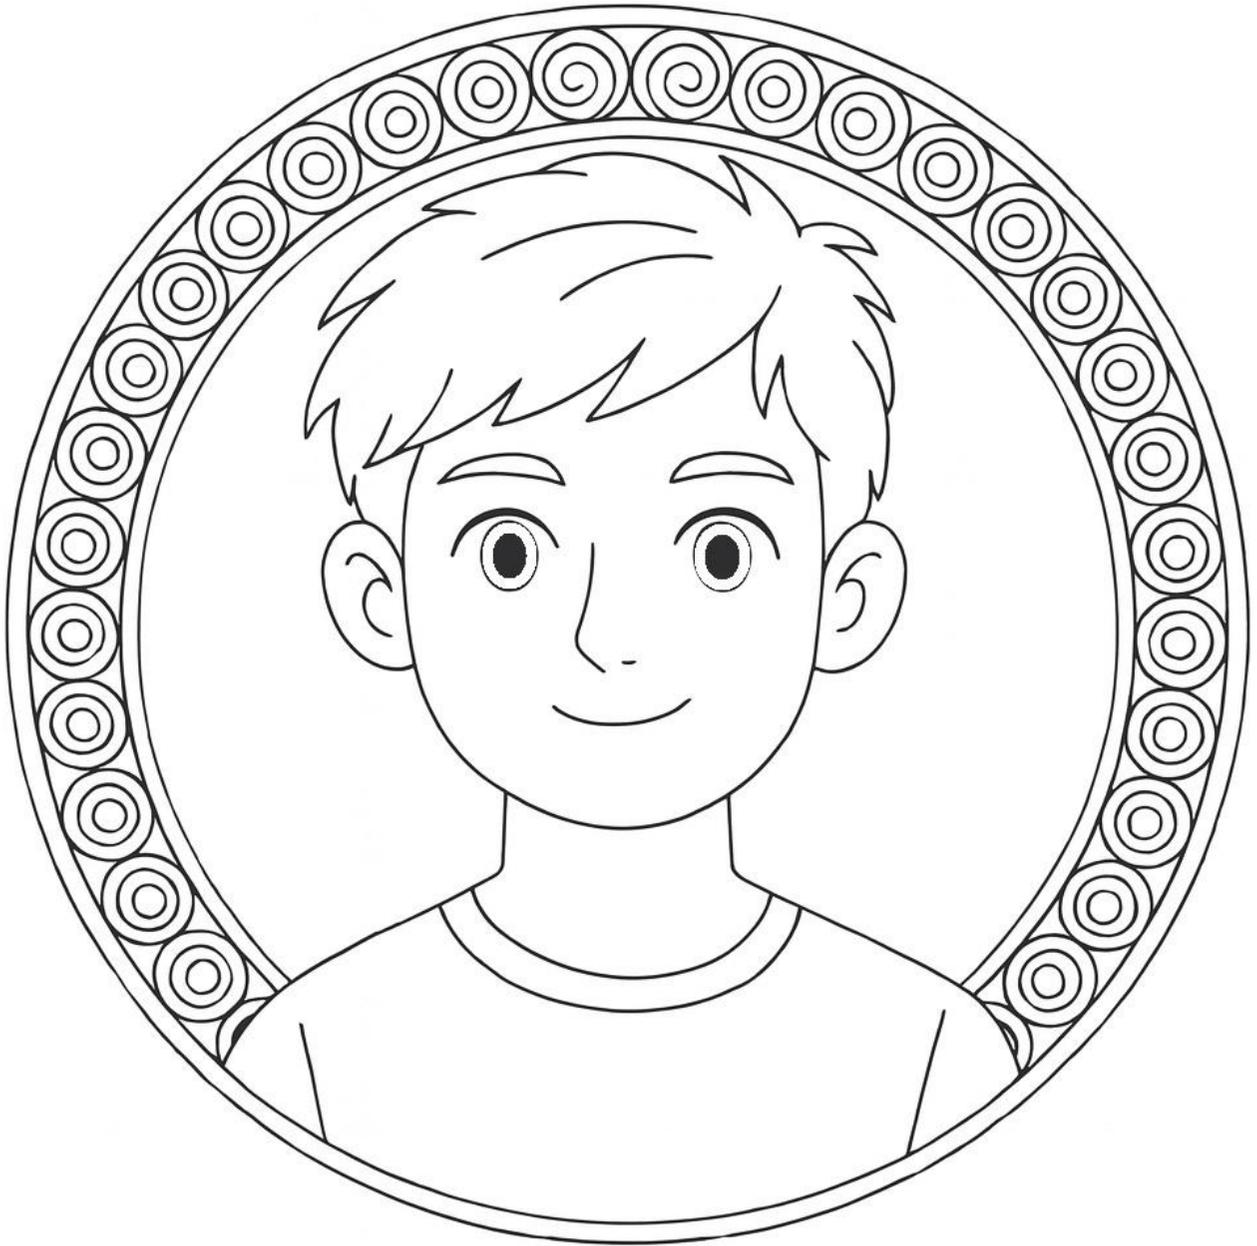

"My name is Truth," said Trudy.

"You may call me Trudy."

Aletha Truth Holmes

TRUDY

"This is my twin brother, Justice.
We call him Jay."

Chapter 1 – The Magic Key

We people of the City of Reason, are very tall.

Trudy and Jay found themselves facing an open gate.

Chapter 2 – Into the Swamp

"What happened to Key?" asked Trudy.
"I'm Key," said the monkey and bird together.
"I have it," said the donkey.

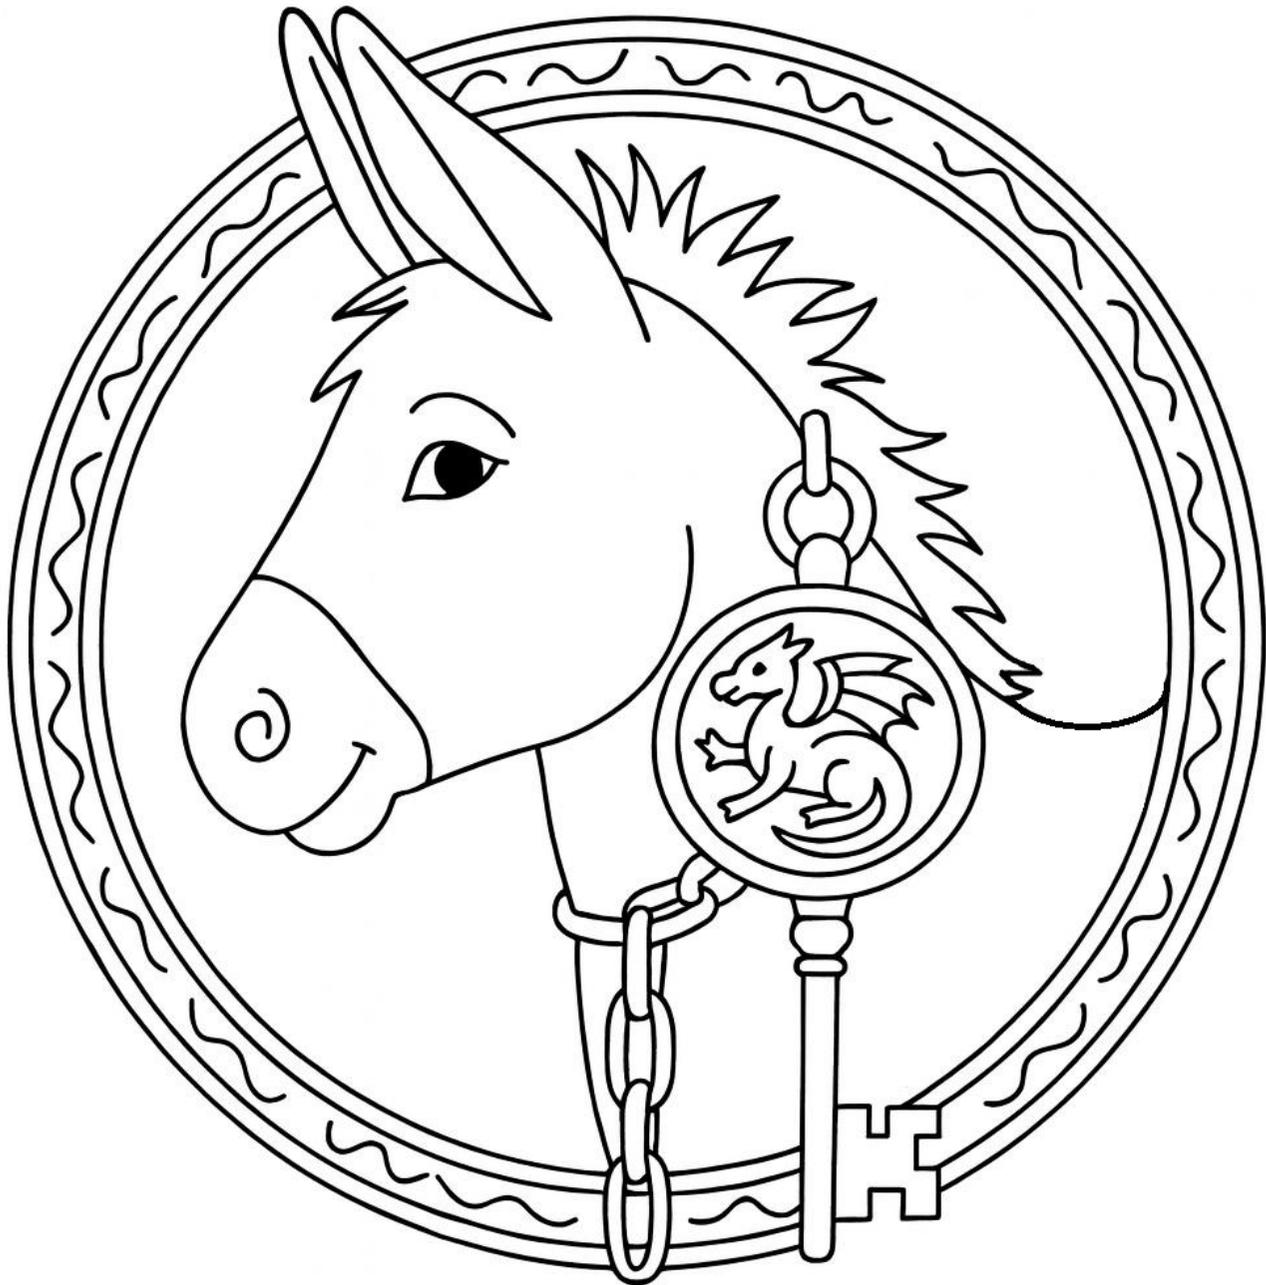

"I am Passie Key," she said, putting the tip of one wing on her chest.

Passie

"Banana peels and slippery limbs!" screeched Hai.

Hai

"It is just a sign," said Lug. If donkeys could shrug, he would have.

Lug

A little over a mile away, a fat brown dragon lay wallowing lazily in the mud.

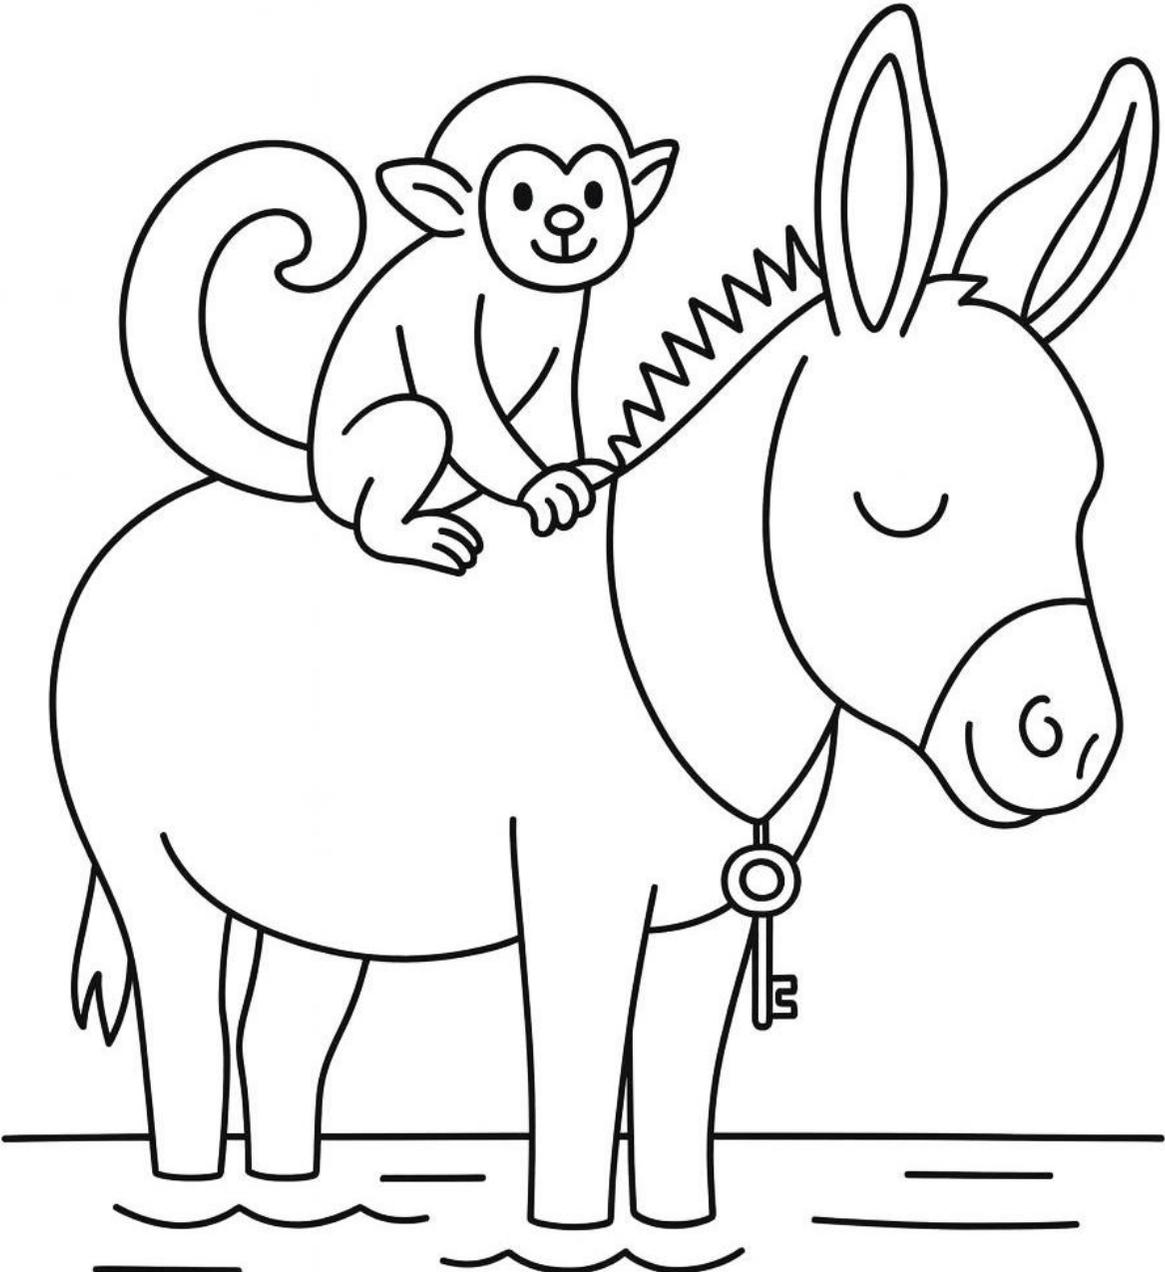

Quiver

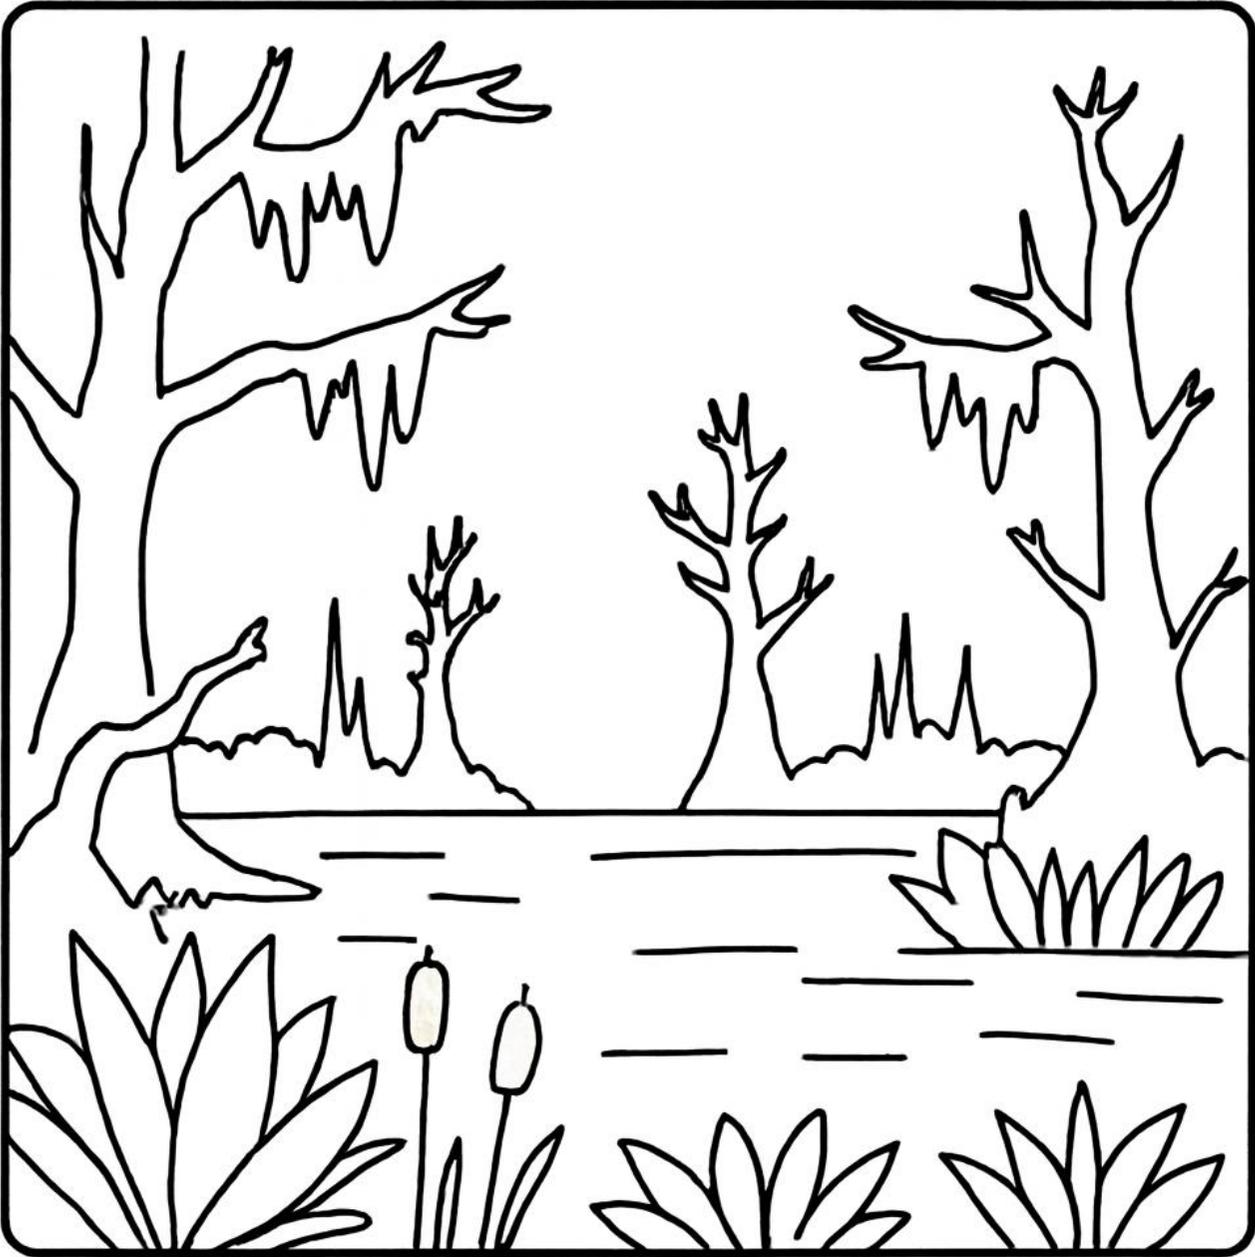

"I have news, Quiver," announced the crow.

Chapter 6 – Hot Dogs and Rolls

A strange thing was the strings in the trees between the houses, about a dozen feet up in the air. They formed a sort of net or web over the town. Tied on the strings every few inches were feathers of all kinds, ping pong balls, half-deflated balloons, pieces of balsa wood from broken toy glider planes, and white plastic peanuts often used to pack things for shipping.

Chapter 6 – Hot Dogs and Rolls

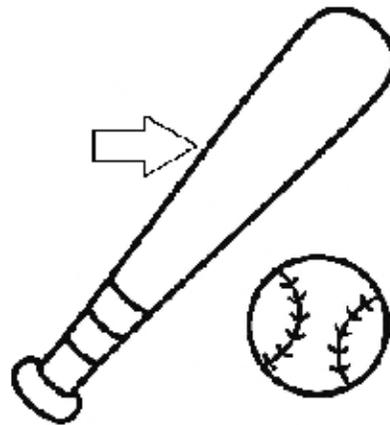

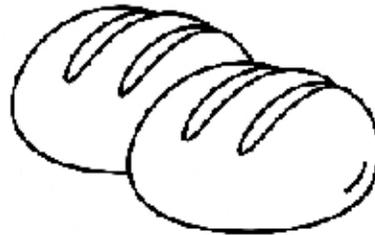

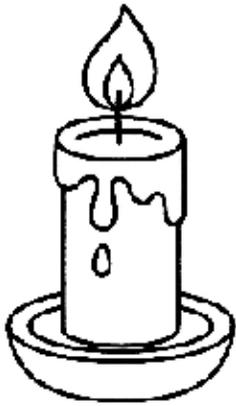

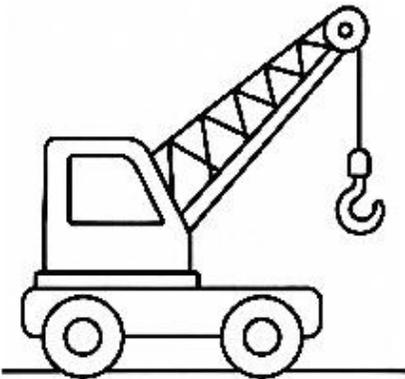

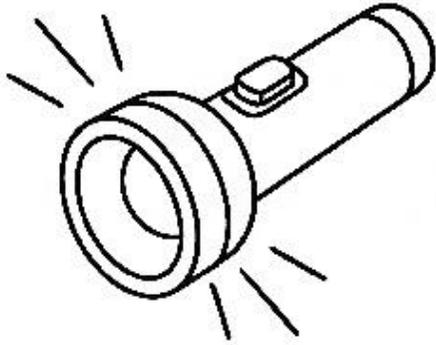

Hot Dog Feast

"Where are the rolls?" asked Jay.
"They come after," explained Rusty.
After eating hot dogs, people got up and began rolling on the ground,
"See," said Rusty, "Rolls."
